

NEW EDITOR NAMED FOR INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL OF NURSING TERMINOLOGIES AND CLASSIFICATIONS

For Immediate Release

(Green Bay, WI) – Dr. Jane Flanagan has been appointed as the new Editor of the NANDA International (NANDA-I) professional trade journal, International Journal of Nursing Terminologies and Classifications (IJNTC). NANDA-I is an international organization that develops, refines and promotes terminology that accurately reflects nurses’ clinical judgments. Dr. Flanagan was previously an Associate Editor of the journal.

“I am honored to accept the appointment as Editor of IJNTC,” said Flanagan. “Having worked on the journal as an Associate Editor, I have come to know it well. I completely support NANDA-I’s vision to strengthen the clinical nursing focus of IJNTC, and look forward to guiding the publication in this direction.”

Flanagan has an extensive and successful background in the nursing profession. She is an assistant professor at the William F. Connell School of Nursing at Boston College. She holds appointments as a faculty associate scientist at the Massachusetts General Hospital - Yvonne Munn Center and as an associate clinical scientist at the Phyllis Cantor Center at the Dana Farber Cancer Institute. In addition, she is certified by the American Nurses Credentialing Center as an adult nurse practitioner and maintains a clinical practice as a nurse practitioner at Massachusetts General Hospital in the Clinical Research Center.

“I am delighted that Dr. Flanagan has accepted this leadership role with IJNTC,” said T. Heather Herdman, PhD, RN, Executive Director of NANDA-I. “She combines a deep understanding and respect for developing standardized nursing language for nurses, educators and administrators with a strong publication and editorial history.”
